For centuries fine rosewood furniture graced the finest estates of Europe. For decades this furniture was exported to America as antiques. However, the desire for hand-crafted rosewood furniture eventually exceeded the supply.

Until recently fine rosewood furniture was available as antique reproductions hand crafted by The Royal House. The Royal House has closed its doors but a good supply of this fine hand crafted furniture will be offered at absolute auction on December 13, 1999 and will sell without reserve to the highest bidder.

Artisans using hand-carving skills passed down for generations craft each piece from select, weather-aged solid rosewood. Using a French polishing technique, each piece is hand rubbed for days to create a rich, natural luster that accentuates the true character of rosewood.

No one piece of this furniture is an exact manufactured duplicate. A close look reveals slight variations in detailing created by the carver. This uniqueness is "the heart" of this hand crafted furniture.

Fine, hand-carved rosewood furniture is unique by design. It's more than fine rosewood furniture.
